COURSE DESCRIPTION

Video Production 4 Honors is a capstone course for students enrolled in the Video Production course pathway. Students will strengthen their video production skills, including full manual control of digital cameras, an understanding of appropriate audio and lens selection, and the use of gimbals for moving shots. They will write, direct, edit, and produce narrative films shot both in and outside of class time. Students will demonstrate advanced color grading and audio engineering techniques, and they will be able to shoot for continuity, as well as complete a complex, single-take shot. Students will practice both single and multi-camera production techniques and serve as editors for long-term projects. They will develop a deep understanding of the language of cinema and the elements of production. Throughout the course, students will serve in multiple roles, including director, producer, actor, camera operator, and audio engineer. Video Production 4 Honors students will also mentor students in lower-level Video Production classes.

GRADING GUIDELINES

Production: 80%

Coursework Comprehension: 20%

Students will brainstorm potential film ideas. Once selected, students will use Unit 1 skills in the pre-production process. Scripts will be produced and shared with their peers for feedback. Scripts will be refined through formal and informal assessments. Students will be responsible for the production of the video, including the selection and management of crew, equipment, and location. Students will hold a pre-production meeting with all cast and crew to discuss the roles, responsibilities, and schedules. Students will be required to manage the following: deadlines, budgets, staffing, and equipment for the successful completion of their videos. Students will establish regular, formal and informal meetings and/or updates with their teacher to discuss the status of their film and identify any potential issues. In post-production, the student will edit to add in such items as visual effects, foley sounds, music, non diegetic sound, voiceover, images, titles, and other appropriate items. A rough cut will be screened with selected individuals for feedback. Based on the feedback, the student will make additional revisions (which may include re-filming scenes or filming new scenes) to complete a final video. The final video will be shown to a large audience in settings such as the following: classroom, theater, or other student/public venues. Students will also engage in distribution and promotional activities for their short films, including the creation of such items as press releases, posters, and movie trailers. Students will also be encouraged to show their video at other school/District events and enter their short films into film festivals or competitions. Students will be required to adapt to challenges and timelines in a group setting to accomplish their tasks and projects. Specific roles and responsibilities will be defined and agreed upon. Opposing views and conflict resolution strategies will be discussed and developed. Students will analyze
